Writing - My Mead Hall

The raucous laughter filled the crisp night air. Towering over me, was a ^{wooden} giant, its mouth wide open, throwing light and dancing shadows on the into the wood behind me. You could barely hear the rushing river ^{nearby} behind me, nestled in this valley, ~~you were~~ the Mead Hall looked so out of place ~~it~~ against the starry sky. I took a step ~~forward~~, using my momentum to help me push open the heavy oak door. And suddenly, there was noise all around me, ~~shoved from behind by a woman, dancing around, she didn't seem to care a bit,~~ banners of blue and gold, hung down from the gables watching over me, the fires, crackling and flickering illuminating the room. Jutting out from pillars, ~~various~~ animal heads stared out across the bustling hall, their ~~eyes~~ glassy eyes glazed over, doomed to that expression for all eternity.

My eyes hungrily took in the room, savouring every detail, until, as if in a trance, I found myself watching the hustle + bustle commence. I dodged the dancing group and ~~reluctantly~~ begrudgingly avoided the roasted hog, till I came face-to-face with King Hrothgar himself. Lounging in his ornate throne, he looked every bit the triumphant war lord he was. His stony eyes seemed to settle on me, ^{for a moment} maybe I had imagined it but he then raised his goblet, smiling briefly before taking another bite off his chicken bone.

sp I pulled my collar down, the warmth of the fires creeping under my winter skins, making me all of a sudden, very ~~hot~~. I caught snippets of conversation as I pushed past the crowds, in an effort to get close to the window. It seemed everyone was doing the same thing as I was & now ~~samwiched~~ between two burly men, both ~~boasting~~ about how strong they were.
